$10,000 Toyota Celica to anyone who comes up with a winning guess on when it will rain.

So far, no one has won, Sivelle said, but added "keep your fingers crossed."

The Golden Knights, the Army's parachute demonstration team, will execute precision jumps today and Sunday over the stadium. The group has appeared before Orange Show crowds before — demonstrating some of the stunts that have won them scores of national awards and five world parachuting championships.

Composed of 62 men and women, the group's shows assist the Army Recruiting Command.

Members are selected from hundreds of applications the team receives each year. Each prospective Golden Knight must have an unblemished military record, have at least 150 free-fall parachute jumps and attend a rigorous six-week tryout at Fort Bragg, N.C.

One of the team's jumps this year will be the cut-away, which requires the jumper to resort to emergency procedures while falling earthward under a malfunctioning canopy.

Today's Golden Knight performance will be before the 5 p.m. Grandstand show. Sunday, the team will jump at the conclusion of the Military Parade, which is about 2 p.m.

The Military Parade, Sunday's main event, is celebrating its 55th anniversary this year — 50 of those years as a part of the Orange Show, according to Michael J. Gaughan Jr., parade chairman.

Gaughan said there are about 6,000 persons participating in the bands, marching groups, drill teams and individual floats and motor vehicles.

The parade will assemble Sunday at 5th and E streets and begin its march southward on E Street at 11:30 a.m.

The 1982 parade's honor group is the Marine Corps and Maj. Gen. James L. Day, commanding general, 1st Marine Division, Camp Pendleton, will be the grand marshal.

Another feature today is the annual Camera Day, which will draw amateur photographers and their cameras to the Lagoon area and to the Citrus Features Building.

reputation for making inflammatory remarks.

His statements often get him into trouble, but also win him media attention. Though he was stripped of key committee assignments earlier this year after making derogatory remarks about women, Jews and homosexuals, Schmitz joked that the censure was worth the publicity.

In his talk, entitled "The Legislator's Role in Law Today" — commemorating Law Day today — Schmitz managed to lash out at U.S. support for Israel, the growing power of the federal government and cowardly politicians who refuse to make tough decisions.

And he warned of the dire consequences if President Reagan's economic program was not allowed to work.

Speaking to a receptive audience that laughed loudly at his frequent one-liners, the Marine Corps Reserve colonel raised the specter of a military coup, echoing a statement he made several months ago that made headlines statewide.

"We're not jumping for joy," Ching said of Olsen's decision. "Obviously we're disappointed."

Ching had expected a series of suits across the country to recover funds lost by the church to Davenport.

Church attorneys declined to comment on Olsen's ruling. A statement from the Adventists' world headquarters in Washington, D.C., said all proper trust obligations will be honored by church entities, notwithstanding any losses that may have been incurred in connection with the Davenport matter.

Ching's suit had sought $10 million in actual damages and $25 million in punitive damages.

yards, parks and other lands graded but not built upon or paved over.

However, Jaquess said, the formula devised to achieve the goal of undisturbed acreage was based on an under-estimate of how steep many slopes are. The result, he said, is that the formula as now written would produce at least 6,900 acres of natural open space.

Chino Hills Commissioner Karen Bristow successfully insisted that the amount of open space required should continue increasing with every additional 2½ percent of slope gradient above 10 percent. She said many residents, complaining that county planners merely accept the word of developers' engineers on whether open space requirements are being met, favor that part of the formula because it provides them a way of checking on their own.

But Bristow and other commissioners tentatively agreed to accept a Building Industry Association proposal to change the other part of the formula by reducing the amount of open space required with each gradient interval.

Jim McCormick, a leading spokesman for landholders, said in urging the correction that the 6,900-acre requirement would pose severe development problems on many properties, especially if future market conditions encourage more home building on relatively large lots and less clustering of housing than the plan now envisions.

Mental health

SAN BERNARDINO — A training program for persons interested in assisting the Mental Health Association of San Bernardino with its programs will begin May 13.

Volunteers are needed for such programs as the activity center, group meetings for friends and families of the mentally disabled, a Saturday recreation program, Community Friends Program, a friendship club and the child sexual abuse treatment program.

About 100 volunteers are currently working in the programs.

The training session will meet from 7 to 9 p.m. each Thursday through June 3.
